JIN Data Exchange (JINDEX)

Microsoft and Sonic made two-hour presentations to the Technical Advisory Group (TAG) on Tuesday morning, and the TAG met again in the afternoon to discuss the sessions and identify next steps. We agreed to cut down the number of factors to be considered by eliminating those areas in which we see no meaningful difference between the two candidates. I sent a revised score sheet to the TAG this afternoon and have requested feedback by next Wednesday. We will then send the final version out for completion and announce the results at the design session on February 4th.

I also received the final version of the Customer Requirements Report. Please let me know if you would like a copy.

Summary Offender Profile (SOP)

Templar is still working with AOC to validate that SOP is returning all relevant data from JIS. We learned this week that the application is getting data from a development, rather than a production, server at AOC, which may be the cause of the problem.

I also received a revised draft of my amendment to the Templar contract replacing the addition of JBRS data with a sale of the SOP source code, which remained proprietary under the original agreement. The document looks more or less acceptable to me and I have sent on to DIS counsel for review.

I made preliminary arrangements with Heather Anderson of WSP to provide training for the approximately 20 DOC users who have expressed an interest in experimenting with the application.

Electronic Citations

I met with Representatives Lovick and Pearson to discuss the draft legislation to abolish the requirement for signatures on citations. Representative Lovick signed on as a sponsor and Representative Pearson requested some time to review the draft. I also met with Tammy Fellin of the Association of Washington Cities to clarify the intent of the draft and passed on some background material. We will meet with Senator Johnson next week.

I sent a proposed statement of work for the e-citations infrastructure and automation of the AOC? DOL exchange to the DIS legal department for incorporation into a Request for Proposals, which I hope to validate with my project steering committee over the next couple of weeks.
